Jesse van der Velden	J
Peter Knot	P

J: we should discuss how we lost two members.
R: one of our members left without notice, we had to hear it from Kaas. Our other member we kicked from the team.

R: the Trello board went better this sprint. It was more clear which takes there were.
J: I agree, we could split the tasks efficiently.

M, R and P discuss the database functions and where they are. Now everyone is up to date on where the functions are and how they work.

P: mentioned we worked to much in the Master branch of the git repository. This is not a good idea and we should use a "main" separate branch for each sprint.

R, P and J: practice the demo beforehand to make sure it will work. Perhaps create a new git branch and don't touch it anymore.

J: setup a naming schema for git branches. They will now be called sprintx-function. Where x and function should be replaced by the current sprint and the function you're working on.

P: whilst it is hard to kick out a team member, it was probably the right thing to do. He only cost us time and effort and did not contribute to the team. R en J agree with this. J adds that especially the last Friday he had to help Keyan a lot, but in the end he produces nothing of value to the project.

P: we need to ask Samim for clarification on what his relation is to our project team now. In a roundabout way we hard he is stopping with the project but he never informed us properly. He is also still in our project team on blackboard.

R: I feel like the project skills went really well. J agrees and says we "Aced it".

P: The methods we learned at project skills actually helped us with the problems we had with Keyan. We were able to apply the theory to a real life conflict.

P: "I think we discussed everything we needed to discuss. Let's start this new sprint with renewed confidence in the team!"
